9. FAQ's

Question: How does HGS Define Digital Transformation?

Answer: “Digital strategy encompasses a set of objectives, processes, activities, and metrics that must consider the principles of IT governance. This approach aims to establish and evolve the right structures to steer digital transformation activities, ensuring the strategic alignment of IT projects with the organization's business vision and strategy.”

HGS Founder Definition, 2020

Question: Why Do Most Digital Transformation Projects Fail?

Answer: Digital transformation transcends mere operational upgrades, fundamentally reimagining organizational structures through a holistic overhaul of processes, culture, and strategic orientation. It represents a significant paradigm shift, necessitating unwavering dedication to innovation, agility, and enhancing customer experiences. At its core, it challenges conventional business models, advocating for a forward-thinking mindset that prioritizes adaptability and a proactive approach to technological integration. This sophisticated perspective underscores the importance of viewing digital transformation as a strategic imperative rather than a discretionary option, pivotal for leaders aiming to navigate their organizations towards sustainable success in a Digitally-Centric-Landscape (DCL).

Question: How do companies navigate the challenges and fears associated with digital transformation, including integration costs, operational disruptions, employee training, data security risks, and the potential for project failure, to successfully implement new digital strategies?

Answer: Incorporating our HGS Proprietary Framework, which aligns organizational goals with technological capabilities, we ensure a harmonized approach to digital transformation. Our methodology fosters collaboration within a unified framework, enabling teams to work cohesively towards common objectives. This strategic alignment, coupled with our commitment to partnership and collaboration, empowers companies to navigate the complexities of digital transformation confidently. By working together in 'the same box,' we ensure that technology serves as a catalyst for achieving strategic goals, driving innovation, and securing competitive advantage.
